Dear Wallace:

Many thanks for all the help which you gave me Sunday. I certainly appreciated having you host the group, and I thought it was a most informative session.

As stray thoughts come to you concerning the whereabouts of individuals, and interesting tidbits, I'd hope that you might jot them down and send them to me occasionally. All such minutiae becomes valuable when placed in with the other pieces of the jig saw puzzle.

Meanwhile, I got to my destination about 11:05, and had two profitable days of looking into a business venture in North Carolina, and then headed back up the interstate yesterday.

I detoured to Winchester, Ky., looking for John K. Hickey, who was a 306th pilot in '43, but could find no trace of him.

Please tell your wife that I appreciated the coffee, and hope that our invasion didn't upset the household too much.

I shall look forward to seeing you Oct. 15-17.

Sincerely yours,
